Little things that make life more liveable.

TOP TOGS

Ethical from seed to the shirt on your back, everything conscious clothing label Kowtow does is underscored by its sustainable values. True to form, its first collection of swimwear is crafted from regenerated nylon made from waste materials. If that's not enough to make you feel good, the six styles for all figures will undoubtedly be.

DIG IN

Nailing the shared plate brief is this pottery by local ceramics stalwart Tony Sly. European-looking, vintagey shapes handmade in Raglan, what we have here are his Rustic Open Bowl and Rustic Oblong Platter. Both come in a gorgeous green glaze as well.

ROUND HERE

Back in 2013, the first collection of Australian sisters Emma Henderson and Victoria Beattie of The Beach People's round towels sold out within weeks. Today, their seaside-luxe essentials are sought after worldwide, so we suggest you make it your business to get your hands on this desert-inspired, 100% cotton Savannah Roundie design that's newly available at A&C Homestore.

THAT'S ZINCREDIBLE!

As a former beauty editor, Melbournian Zoë Foster Blake knows what's up, and spent four-and-a-half years developing a daily moisturiser with SPF 15 for her skincare brand Go-To that doesn't make your face feel yuck. Zincredible is deeply hydrating and also a broad-spectrum, synthetic-free mineral sunscreen.

NICE JUGS

There's just something about blown glass, isn't there? London-based German creative Jochen Holz made these jugs for Hay and they're such a fab mix of graceful and playful. They're also made from borosilicate glass, which is extra heat-resistant, and dishwasher safe, too.

THE LITTLE THINGS

Handmade from sustainably sourced New Zealand pine or salvaged rimu floorboards and sealed with natural oils, the charm of Little Bit Daily's soap keepers is in the detail. They're produced by mates Raewyn Pearce and Kieron Thompson, who are all about reducing waste and use the offcuts for kindling, compost the sawdust and keep the recycled packaging to a minimum.

NAPOLEON DYNAMITE

In buttery yellow or white, what's typically the ugliest item on any picnic blanket has been reimagined by Napoleon Goods — and it's an absolute cracker! Though still as lightweight as old-school versions, this chilly bin has a durable stainless-steel latch and handles. Big enough for all the essentials but not too heavy to lug around, it fits 18 standard bottles.
