

“This is not the America that I think foreign students come to live in.”

– Immigration lawyer Fiona McEntee to NPR after the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement announced that international students attending colleges that only offer online classes this fall will not be allowed to remain in the United States.

HARVARD: The Cambridge, Massachusetts, university says all its classes will be virtual this fall. Some 20% of its student body is international.

KATHERINE TAYLOR/REUTERS

“What will happen is essentially a chess game.”

– Lawyer Greg Pilarowski, after tech giants including Facebook, Google, Twitter, and WhatsApp froze requests from Hong Kong authorities to access user data. U.S. companies are waiting to see how strictly Beijing’s new security law will be enforced. If the companies refuse to cooperate outright, they may face criminal action from local Hong Kong authorities. (See related story, page 10.)

JONATHAN BACHMAN/AP/FILE

“[President Donald Trump] can’t stay on a message that is a unified message and one that is a positive one for the country.”

– Former GOP Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum, explaining why Mr. Trump is behind in the polls. A new Gallup Poll showed the president hit a low of 38% in his job approval rating – only 3 percentage points above his all-time low in 2017 – and is trailing presumptive Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden in several battleground states.

“Always deal with the hate being thrown at you with LOVE! ... Even when it’s HATE from the POTUS.”

– Bubba Wallace, in a tweet after President Trump referred to the incident in which a noose was found in the NASCAR driver’s garage as a hoax and asked Mr. Wallace to apologize. Mr. Wallace is NASCAR’s only Black driver.

DARRON CUMMINGS/AP

“Why do I feel compelled to WAVE at the end of Zoom calls? I have literally never walked out of a meeting room WAVING.”

– British author Clare Mackintosh in a tweet, echoing a trend of workers waving at the end of videoconferences. Experts say people had to find social cues that better fit virtual communication, such as waving and smiling, to show that a meeting is about to end.

– Cassandra Coyer / Staff writer