WATCH IT, BUDDY

To keep your watch in its best working order, Tourneau suggests avoiding these four things: sudden shocks or impacts, extreme temperatures, magnetic fields and chemical contact.

CRYSTAL CLEAR

As reported by Tourneau, since sapphire is the second-hardest known element, using it as the watch crystal makes for an extremely scratch-resistant surface.

This Wristwatch Is a Style Staple for Days in the Office as Well as Nights on the Town

➔ From its rose gold case to its crocodile leather straps, the Manero Flyback oozes a timeless charm. The silver-grey detailing on the dial adds a sort of effortless masculinity without overpowering the warmth of the gold or the deep chocolate hues of the straps. Ideal for the man who is precise and a bit of a workaholic, this classic timepiece looks as great with a suit as it does with the sleeves rolled up.

TIME TO NOT WIND

Tourneau notes that watches with an automatic movement (such as the Pathos Diva) wind themselves while being worn, thus eliminating the need for manual winding. However, they will need to be hand-wound if not worn for some time.

UNDER PRESSURE

According to Tourneau, no watch is waterproof—there are limits to what the piece can handle without cracking and, consequently, leaking. Therefore, a watch's water-resistance refers to how much water pressure the watch can withstand.

➔ Rugged yet sleek, the Patravi ScubaTec is ready for anything. Made for the guy who's always looking for an adventure, this wristwatch is water-resistant for up to 500 meters, making it ideal for all thrillseekers by land or by sea. Plus, the deep blue dial and stainless steel case material make for an easy transition from morning surfs to business luncheons with minimal effort.

HOROLOGICAL HISTORY

The first water-resistant watch is said to be the Rolex Oyster, made in 1927. The Oyster was then put to the test by a young British woman named Mercedes Gleitze, who took a chilly, 10-hour swim in the English Channel. Both Gleitze and the Oyster survived the swim in perfect working order!
