Title: You can become a solo skydiver with Advanced Training Courses!

Intro to Advanced Training

How was that first skydiving experience? Did you love the excitement that Tandem skydiving brought you? If you just can't get enough of skydiving, you could take the sport to the next level by becoming a certified solo skydiver. You probably were filled with a lot of adrenaline after landing on the ground after your Tandem skydive. The experience likely played out in your mind as you went back to work, school, and life, and you wowed your family member and friends as you told them about the experience.

If you don't just want to skydive once and be done with it, why not become a certified solo skydiver yourself and make skydiving a regular part of your life? Skydiving.com McAllen offers advanced training courses that can get you certified to do just that. After finishing one of our skydiving schools, you will be certified with the United States Parachute Association (USPA) and be able to solo skydive all over the United States!

With this certification, you could see new sights and experience skydiving all over the country. You could see the Space Needle in Seattle or the Hudson Bay in New York, and much more. There are so many place you could have the pleasure of seeing as you jump through the skies!

We have two different courses available. The most common method of accreditation is Accelerated Free Fall (AFF). This is the fastest way to get your certification. We also offer a method called Tandem Progression that moves at a bit slower pace. But, both of these options will get you to the same goal of becoming a certified skydiver.

If you're ready to skydive all the time, why not become a certified solo skydiver and have lots of adventures?

Title: Become a certified solo skydiver through Accelerated Free Fall courses!

If you are chomping at the bit to skydive by yourself, then one of our Accelerated Free Fall courses could be the perfect for you. This is our fastest way to get certified as a USPA skydiver. The accelerated portion of the title stands for the way the training is conducted. It truly is a fast, accelerated, route to becoming licensed to skydive all over the United States. You will be immersed in the training and jump right into learning in a hands-on way. Don't worry though. You will still be guided and kept safe through the process. The more you apply yourself to the process, the faster you can meet the objectives of the course, and the sooner you will be able to skydive by yourself!

Most of the skydives in the Skydiving.com McAlle AFF program are conducted between 10,000 and 15,000 feet above the ground. How wild is that? You will see the city of McAllen and the Rio Grande below you as you learn to Free Fall!

The AFF training will assign one or two skydiving instructors just for you. This means you will receive one-on-one training and help. This is part of what makes the training accelerated and delivers a great learning experience. You will become comfortable with your instructor or instructors, and feel able to ask all your questions as the process goes along.

AFF Training Process

Keep in mind that every person, instructor, and situation is a little different. So, each person's experience in an AFF training program will vary a bit. Your Skydiving.com McAllen instructor will decide when you have learned what you need to learn in order to advance to the next level of training. They will make these decisions with your safety and best interests in mind. During each level of training, you will need to meet Target Learning Objectives. The instructor will determine when you have met these.

Overall, however, the AFF training process will look like this and follow these general steps.

1. Ground School Instruction: This is when you will learn about the jump and the jump process on the ground. This portion of training takes several hours, but is usually just a one-time part of the process.

2. Harness Hold Training: This level of training takes a little longer. During this portion, the instructor will keep a hold of your harness during the jumps. They will hold on until the parachute is pulled. Then, they will be there to pull the parachute if needed and to guide the rest of the jump in case something goes wrong. This portion will include jumping more than one time.
3. Release Dives: This third step is where you show you can pull your own chute. The instructor will let go of you at subsequent heights and monitor your ability. You also need to show you can do things like manage the Free Fall and control your rate of fall.
4. Demonstrate Final Proficiency: This is when the instructor evaluates your ability to execute all parts of a skydive. You will also do things such as flips and turns in the air.

At the end of the Skydiving.com McAllen AFF training, after passing all the objectives, you will be ready to get certified to become a solo skydiver!

Tandem Progression

Title: Become certified with the Tandem Progression training method!

The Accelerated Free Fall training program is our most popular way of certification to become a skydiver. But we realize that different people learn differently, so we also offer a method called Tandem Progression. This is an option for people who like to take their training a little more slowly.

Skydiving.com McAllen has a team of skydiving instructors who will be happy to guide you along your journey, no matter which of the two training methods you choose. You will get to the same end goal of becoming a USPA-certified, solo skydiver with the Tandem Progression method, too.

The Tandem Progression method is a more methodically paced program. The student will go on some Tandem dives with an instructor before moving onto other steps. After the Tandem dives, the student will transition into the same steps that are used in the AFF training program. So, if you want to enter the “waters” of skydiving a little bit more slowly, the Tandem Progression could be the perfect way for you to become certified as a skydiver.
