

Welcome to Reykjavik, a small city with a big soul

The Land of Fire and Ice

Settled by the Vikings and inhabited by trolls and elves, the capital of the Land of Fire and Ice and the northernmost capital in the world has become a tourism darling in the past couple of years. And for good reasons: from otherworldly nature to colourful boutiques, captivating art, rich culinary choices, to some of the most vibrant nightlife scenes in Europe, this small big city will most likely redefine your whole travel experience.

Nestled on the southern shore of Faxa Bay, with a population of around 120,000, Reykjavik is the heart of Iceland's cultural, economic and governmental activity, and one the cleanest, greenest, and safest cities in the world.

The night is always young in Reykjavik

For a city where beer was banned until 1989, the town currently boasts over 100 trendy bars and clubs, with its main street Laugavegur as the main night-life hub, and of course, beer as its national drink.

The night is always young in Reykjavik, and the fun doesn't end until dawn. The music scene is epic, featuring excellent music, famous festivals, creative local bands, and restless DJ's.

Travel Redefined

Whether you dream to become one with its wonder-nature, to take a dip in the Blue Lagoons, watch the whales and the puffins or experience the unforgettable dance of the Northern Lights, the capital of ice and fire will certainly take your travel experience to a new level.
