Hey Joanna,

Do holiday travel plans stress you out? I love spending time with my family as much as the next person, but holiday travel comes with a lot of pressure.

Trying to pack can be a chaotic nightmare, and then when you finally reach your destination it can feel like you're constantly under scrutiny.

"No, I'm not married yet."

"No, we don't have kids yet."

"Yes, I'm pursuing a career you don't value or understand."

"No, I do not appreciate your comments about my weight."

"What's that? Would I like another glass of wine? Yes, thank you, I would."

You show up for Thanksgiving only to realize you're at an Inquisition.

And it's annoying, and you start experiencing self-doubt. And you find yourself wondering what in the hell you're doing wearing your shabbiest sweater and the pants that give you muffin-top, all while you're trying to deal with the rest of this bullsh*t!

The clothes we wear can help us to feel strong in who we are... or feed into the self-doubt.

So what if you could feel confident knowing that you'll show up to Thanksgiving dinner looking gorgeous and successful, and not worrying whether your outfit was the right pick?

Well this summer I've pooled my experiences as a stylist and world-traveler to put together a FREE guide to Traveling in Style.

This 50+ page e-book includes full packing and prep lists for everything from clothes & accessories, to beauty, to pre-trip To Dos, and includes my insights on how to greatly reduce stress and take care of yourself during your trip.

At your next holiday gathering, show up feeling like a million bucks, not a frumpy mess.

To get access to your free copy of the Traveling in Style e-book, simply add your answers to this 5-minute style survey. It contains 0% family drama, and we'll use your answers to create great content around the things you're interested in the most. (Win-win!)

I can't wait to see how you travel in style!
